The debut of two nieces from Antwerp.

Armed with a ukulele, a guitar or a keyboard (The Law) and driven by a bass guitar (Cranky) they play original indie-pop songs.

Since 2011 they have written and performed a collection of over 30 songs. Now, they've outgrown their demo and selected seven of their newer tracks to combine on their first record: 'Roads Gone By'.

This album is an optimistic and sometimes melancholic look at the trajectory of their (still rather young) lives interpreted differently in each song. They invite the listener to join them in a world of their own creation; one that they grew up in together. The tracks explore romantic and philosophical ideas that are often treated with humor and plenty of self-perspective.

The result is an honest record that they've translated to an equally intimate live performance by welcoming the audience into their living room (or at least the portable replica that they travel with). Here, you can join them as you'd see them during a rehearsal, including their banter, discussions and more than a few bad jokes.

'Roads Gone By' will be released on March 31st, followed by a short tour.

So don't hesitate (or at least not too long) and review or book this band!
